Shabalov Wins 2003 USA Championship

From Jan. 9 –18, 58 of the USA’s top masters fought it out over a $250,000 prize fund (first prize – $ 25,000; women’s champion - $ 12,500), the largest ever for a national title. This tournament integrates the top USA women players, and they are all paired in one swiss. The top women finisher wins the championship. It was played in Seattle.

Going into the final round there was a log jam of 8 players at 5.5/8 : Kaidanov, Shabalov, Akobian, Stripunsky, Gulko, Ivanov, Benjamin and Fedorowicz. Alexander Shabalov faced the 18 year old Varuzhan Akobian. All of the other leaders drew their games – a number of grandmaster draws (looking at the prize money). But Shabalov and Akobian were going for the top spot. First of all Shabalov sac’d a pawn for hoped for positional advantage. Then he lost a second pawn and looked to be in trouble. Fortunately for Shabalov, Akobian then had trouble re-organizing his pieces. Shabalov then sac’d his N temporarily to come up with one of his lost pawns, but more importantly, it left Akobian’s King caught in the center. This forced Akobian to sac his Queen for Rook and Knight to stop a mate. Then in the Queen vs Rook + Bishop ending, Shabalov sac’d his Queen for the Rook, in order to promote his passed pawn. A truly exciting championship game – here it is :

The Women's USA Championship saw a three way tie after the 9 rounds of regular play , between last year's champion, WIM Jennifer Shahade. WGM Irina Krush, and WIM Anna Hahn. Hahn won the fast time control 3 – way playoff, and won the championship. It is interesting to note that this championship showed why many people are opposed to the integrated system of determining a women's champion. The argument is that a swiss system is good for determining a winner and a runner – up, but becomes more of a lottery when trying to find the best female player down in the pack. Hahn in the main tournament had the easiest time of it , playing weaker opponents than did either of the other two. In fact Shahade's opponents averaged 219 points stronger than those of Hahn. Yet Hahn tied in points in the middle of the pack. Something to remember when some argue against Canada having a separate women's championship. So the championship got decided on three 15 min. games – not the best.

Anand Wins 2003 Corus Wijk aan Zee, Netherlands GM Tournament

This traditionally strong start of the year international tournament had a stellar line-up : Vladimir Kramnik (Russia), current World Champion; Ruslan Ponomariov (Ukraine), 2002 FIDE World Champion; Viswanathan Anand (India), 2000 FIDE World Champion; Vassily Ivanchuk (Ukraine), 2002 FIDE World Champion Runner – Up; last year's Corus winner, Evgeny Bareev (Russia); Anatoly Karpov (Russia), 12th FIDE World Champion; Judit Polgar (Hungary), strongest women's player in the world; Veselin Topalov (Bulgaria); Alexei Shirov (Spain); Alexander Grischuk (Russia); Teimour Radjabov (Azerbaijan); Loek Van Wely (Netherlands); Michal Krasenkow (Poland); and Jan Timman (Netherlands).

Though he hadn't played any classical chess for about a year, Anand showed he fully deserves his ranking as the third-highest rated player in the world. This will only fuel the debate about his being excluded from the current title reunification matches. He was undefeated, scoring 8.5/13 pts., a ½ pt. ahead of the second place finisher. In second at 8 pts, was Judit Polgar, also undefeated. On the way she defeated Karpov, and drew Anand, Kramnik and Ponomariov. This was one of her best ever showings in tournament play, and showed that she is still a player to be reckoned with. Third place went to Bareev, with 7.5 pts.

This tournament showed that Kramnik is certainly not invincible. He lost 3 games and finished tied 4th-8th. Ponomariov also fared poorly, losing 5 games, and finishing tied 11th-12th. Not an auspicious showing for one battling with FIDE to get better terms in his hoped for upcoming match with the top ranked Garry Kasparov, in the championship reunification cycle.

The FIDE “ Man vs Machine “ Championship Match

With the Kramnik vs Deep Fritz match still fresh in everyone’s mind (they drew), now along comes Garry Kasparov, 13th FIDE World Champion and highest rated player in the world, to play three-times computer world champion, Deep Junior. It is Garry’s first computer match since his match in 1997 with IBM’s Deep Blue. It is a six game match (Jan. 26, 28, 30, Feb. 2, 4 , 6), and is played at classical time control (40 moves in 2 hrs., additional 20 moves in 1 hr., and sudden death 30 min.). The prize fund is $ 1 Million. If Garry wins the match, he gets $ 800,000, $ 750,000 for a draw, and $ 700,000 for a loss. Not bad money for sitting opposite a silicon chip for a few days.

Kasparov won the first game on Jan. 26. He had an awesome Knight planted in the middle of DJ’s position, and the computer decided to give up the exchange to get rid of it, certainly a dubious decision. After a few more exchanges, down the exchange, DJ resigned. Here is the game :

The second game on Jan. 28 was an exciting draw. Kasparov was black and played the Sicilian , but not his favourite Najdorf. A little into the game, Kaspy gave up the exchange on the Queen-side, and in return got a pawn on the 2nd, which however was short-lived. Being up material, with Kasparov pushing for a back-rank mate, DJ then sac’d his Queen for a Rook and Bishop. Kasparov initially offered a draw, which DJ declined, but shortly after they agreed to a draw. Here is the game :

In the third game, D.J. made a comeback and won, tying the match 1.5 : 1.5. Kasparov started promisingly, sacking a pawn for a King-side attack, eventually winning the pawn back. But his attack petered out, and D.J. won a loose pawn on the K-side to go a pawn up. Thereafter, commentators said Kasparov had a draw, but misplayed it, losing a second pawn in the center, and he resigned. Here is the game :
